TICKETS IN IOWA.

Gov. Cummins and Perkins May Each Have One.

Sioux City, Ia., July 14.—Aside from an occasional snarl from both sides to those who will or will not take the open campaign for the governorship has become quiet. It may be the pre-convention calm before the storm which threatens to break out at Des Moines Aug. 1, when the convention meets. All the counties have held conventions or deciding caucuses. Briefly, the situation is: Instructed, or known to be for Cummins, 855; instructed for Perkins, or known to be anti-Cummins, 530.

A few days' calm has been somewhat interrupted by a new proposition from Mr. Perkins, made editorially in his newspaper, to Gov. Cummins to compromise their troubles. Mr. Perkins' plan to submit to the national committee was not only refused by Gov. Cummins, but called into question by many of the congressional delegation. Now Mr. Perkins proposes, in order that these by convention time to prevent a settlement, and then two tickets will result. The effort of Chairman Spence to get a meeting for July 10 of the state committee to take up the question of contested delegations having failed indicates that the state committee will attempt to assume jurisdiction over the question.

The proposal has been received with derision by the Cummins men. Contests are still being made, and it is possible the Perkins men will have enough of these by convention time to prevent a settlement, and then two tickets will result. The effort of Chairman Spence to get a meeting for July 10 of the state committee to take up the question of contested delegations having failed indicates that the state committee will attempt to assume jurisdiction over the question.

The Times' Daily Short Story.

A Private Supper

[Copyright, 1906, by R. Douglas.]
It was to be a private little supper with a game of poker afterward.

The guests arrived in due season, the supper was lingered over and at length concluded, and the party was about to adjourn to the card table in the library when the harmony prevailing was suddenly interrupted. A sixth man entered the room unannounced and advanced to the table. He was a man about forty years old, with an iron jaw.

"Gentlemen," he began, as all looked at him interrogatively and as the lawyer elevated his eyebrows in surprise, "I owe you an apology for this interruption. The fact is I have been in the habit of dropping in here and there unannounced for the last ten years, and it has become a sort of second nature to me. The less fuss made over me the better for my business. My occupation is relieving my fellow men."

With that he poured himself out a glass of wine and sipped it slowly and with evident satisfaction as he looked around.

"Are we to understand," said the lawyer as he toyed with his knife, "that you are a burglar, robber or something of that ilk?"

"Your perspicacity does you credit," smiled the unknown.

"Well, you are a merry fellow," said the lawyer as he wondered whether the thing was real or a farce.

"Thank you. We have to have nerve in this business. As you observe, I clear away a space here and place my two guns on the table. I shall have to begin with you, Mr. Blank, as the host and ask you to shell out. You are not armed, and neither are any of your guests. As for the servants, they don't count. As a lawyer you cannot fail to see that I have my case half won at the start."

"Don't play the fool here!" cautioned the lawyer as he straightened up in his chair. "You have already laid yourself liable to severe punishment."

"It will not dispute your knowledge of the law, my dear sir, but catching comes before hanging. I also request you not to play the fool. In other words, don't drive me to extremes. You have a wad in your pocket ready for the poker game. I will trouble you for it."

The lawyer glanced at his four guests and saw that none of them would support him in being obstinate. He took another look at the iron jaw of the stranger and then passed over a roll containing several hundred dollars.

"Some of you may think I need an excuse for being engaged in this profession," said the stranger as he pocketed the money and looked at each guest in turn. "Let me say that I am simply following the lines laid down by each and every one of you."
